THE C BAR RANCH

By CATON MACTAVISH

FOR one seeking a healthful outdoor life with the virile sports and diversions found only upon a Western cattle ranch, the C Bar will admirably fill all requirements.

Located in a picturesque section of the Dragoon Mountains, whose rugged scenic beauties are nowhere surpassed in Southern Arizona, this old established livestock ranch with its rambling main building modernly equipped and shaded by a grove of spreading cottonwood trees, offers an ideal home for the tourist-guest in both winter and summer.

Protected in all directions by the high ridges of the Dragoons and the nearer rolling foothills, winter temperatures at the C Bar are astonishingly mild and balmy, and differ little from the late spring days of the north and east. Due to an elevation of more than 5000 feet the air at the C Bar is cool and invigorating in mid-summer days, and a blanket becomes a nightly requirement.

With both railroad and motor highway service available, the C Bar is easily reached from east and west. The ranch lies less than five miles from Dragoon, a Southern Pacific main line town, with daily train service from both Tucson and El Paso.

An excellent motor highway, via Benson, Arizona, places the ranch but three hours drive from Tucson, while motorists traveling west by the Willcox route are also brought directly to the C Bar.

While the guest steps outside the ranch house to find himself in the atmosphere of a typical western cow ranch, with staunch corrals and outbuildings, within doors are modern conveniences that assure comforts found upon few ranches. There are spacious, well-lighted rooms and adequate bathing and toilet facilities.

Meals served at the C Bar are unsurpassed, and in addition to the fat beef, the chickens, turkeys, eggs, milk and butter supplied from the ranch stock, daily train service, sixteen hours from Los Angeles makes possible a continuous supply of fresh meats, fish, vegetables and table delicacies from the city markets. Good, wholesome food, well cooked and served, is a feature at the C Bar.

There are many forms of diversion, chief among them horseback riding. The C Bar maintains a herd of well broken, dependable saddle-horses, sure-footed animals experienced in treading the most precipitous of mountain trails. The rolling, green foothills that surround the C Bar Ranch furnish terrain for one of the sportiest golf courses imaginable. The C Bar has the distinction of having established the first golf links in Arizona, and a nine-hole course is available to enthusiasts.

With its rolling, grass covered foothills and mountains to the west, and the rocky wilderness of Sheep Canyon and Texas Canyon to the south and southwest, the surrounding country lends itself admirably to enjoyable riding trips as well as invigorating hikes on foot. A climb about the balancing rocks of Sheep Canyon, but a half hour's ride from the ranch, cannot help but thrill the most venturesome of mountain climbers. Another interesting pastime for those who enjoy pursuits of adventure is provided by the large mines of the Johnson Mining District, two miles north of the home ranch, most of which are now inactive and may be explored under the watchful eye of a guide.

Within easy motoring distance are several points of scenic and historic interest that ideally lend themselves to picnic outings. Twenty miles to the southeast is the famous Cochise Stronghold, natural fortress of the Apache Indians in early days, while to the north one may visit the Isaacson Hot Springs, as well as Wildcat Canyon and Box Canyon, with its giants sycamores and pines.

The C Bar is an old established ranch with more than half a century of development behind it, and has been in possession of its present owners for many years. The magnificent grove of trees that shade its buildings were planted forty years ago and the large, comfortable house of today has been in gradual process of enlargement and improvement since that far day. The host and hostess, originally from eastern homes, are typical of the sturdy pioneer stock that ventured into an untamed, savage-ridden country, bringing civilization with them.

The C Bar has a complete library of several hundred volumes including several of the classics as well as the modern authors.

Since their advent the C Bar has become noted for its lavish hospitality to wayfaring friends. The Fieges have the happy knack of providing well for their guests and making them feel welcome and thoroughly at home.

An abundance of pure mountain water is supplied from a group of wells at the ranch, which boasts the most fully developed water system in that section of the country.
